

Tackling Anti-Social Behaviour:

Our Commitment To You

Quarterly Performance Report

Quarter 3: 2010-2011
(October-December) 2010

Background to this report

As from March 2010 all community safety partnerships¹ in England have had to publish a document setting out what they will do as a minimum to tackle anti-social behaviour (ASB) in their areas.

The Cambridge Community Safety Partnership minimum standards document Tackling Anti-Social Behaviour: Our Commitment To You set out ten key anti-social behaviour targets and committed the Partnership to reporting on these targets four times a year.

This is the second of these quarterly reports. In coming quarters, as the range of data builds, we will provide quarter-by-quarter comparisons and also annual figures.

If you have any questions about the Partnership's minimum standards or about this report, please contact:

¹ Community safety partnerships (often called 'crime and disorder reduction partnerships' or CDRPs) were introduced by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. They bring together a range of agencies that have a duty or an interest in combating crime and disorder, including anti-social behaviour. The membership of Cambridge Community Safety Partnership includes the police, the city and county councils, the fire service, the probation service, Cambridgeshire NHS and bodies representing local businesses and the voluntary sector.
